Bingaman safe, Johnson Dems' only threat in open seat race

Raleigh, N.C. – New Mexico Senator Jeff Bingaman generally cruises to re-election, and if he chooses to go for a sixth term, he would start off as a heavy favorite. But there has been some speculation he will instead retire. In his stead, Democrats should still be in strong shape to hold his seat unless popular former Governor Gary Johnson declines a run for president to make a bid for Congress' upper chamber instead.

With a 56-27 approval-disapproval margin, Bingaman is more popular at home than all but four of the 77 colleagues which PPP has measured in the last year or so. This strong favor with his voters gives Bingaman formidable odds to walk to re-election, even against Johnson, whose 44-32 favorability rating makes him considerably the best liked of the non-Bingaman candidates, and who is almost equally popular with Democrats, Republicans, and independents.

Johnson comes closest to beating the incumbent, yet still trails, 51-40. By comparison, Rep. Steve Pearce lags Bingaman, 57-34, and Rep. Heather Wilson trails, 56-37. The Republicans all do what would make them far more competitive in almost any other state: they at least match the incumbent in party unity and take more of his voters from him than he does of theirs. But the Democrats' 26-point turnout advantage and independents' Democratic leanings make these matchups blowouts. Bingaman wins unaffiliated voters' support by 7 points over Johnson, 28 over Wilson, and 30 over Pearce.

If Bingaman retires, prospective replacements Reps. Martin Heinrich and Ben Ray Lujan would also post strong leads against Pearce and Wilson (53-38 and 50-39 for Heinrich and 49-37 and 48-40 for Lujan). But Heinrich would narrowly lag Johnson, 43-44, and Lujan would fall behind, 40-45. Heinrich and Lujan lose more of their voters to the Republicans than does Bingaman, but they post double-digit leads with independents, except when Lujan faces Johnson, who takes independents by eight points.

“Jeff Bingaman is a near lock for reelection,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “Gary Johnson could be competitive in an open seat situation but whether some of his unorthodox views would allow him to get the Republican nomination is a different question.”

PPP surveyed 545 New Mexico voters from February 4th to 6th. The survey's margin of error is +/-4.2%. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.
