Economy more pressing to Americans than War on Terror

Raleigh, N.C. – As Wednesday’s release showed, President Obama’s bounce following the death of Osama Bin Laden was limited. The main reason, beyond hardened partisan polarization? Voters care far more about the economy at this point than they do about the decade-long War on Terror. 74% say the economy is a more important issue to them than the war, which is more important to only 10%. Similarly, 61% say they care more about gas prices, and only 23% about the war. This sentiment is shared almost equally across the partisan spectrum.

More voters (51%) give Obama at least some responsibility for gas prices than give him little to no responsibility (46%). Most of that sentiment comes from Republicans, however. 49% of them say he deserves most of the responsibility, and another 34% think he bears at least some responsibility. But two-thirds of Democrats and 53% of independents say he deserves little to no portion of the blame.

Luckily for the president, Americans do give him more credit for killing Bin Laden than George W. Bush. 51% say Obama had more to do with it, to only 32% who say Bush. 59% of Republicans side with Bush, but 21% still think Obama deserves more plaudits, along with 77% of Democrats and half of independents.

Americans also agree with the president’s decision to not release the photographic evidence of Bin Laden’s demise. 59% side with that choice, while only 34% say the photos should be released. Even Republicans, who have done most of the clamoring for the photos being made public, think they should by only a 47-44 margin.

“Obama hasn’t received that much of a boost from the killing of Osama bin Laden and the improvement he has seen doesn’t seem likely to last long,” said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. “That’s because the economy and gas prices in particular are so much more important to voters right now than national security.”

PPP surveyed 814 American voters from May 5th to 8th. The margin of error for the survey is +/-3.4%. This poll was not paid for or authorized by any campaign or political organization. PPP surveys are conducted through automated telephone interviews. PPP is a Democratic polling company, but polling expert Nate Silver of the New York Times found that its surveys in 2010 actually exhibited a slight bias toward Republican candidates.
